GRISELIDIS.

A TALE.

[CONCLUDED.]

IN this manner four years passed away, at the end of which time she had a son, which completed the happiness of the father, and delighted his wife. She nursed him herself, as she had done the other; and when this darling child was two years old, the Marquis was determined to make another trial of the patience of Griselidis. He went to her, saying the same as he did about his daughter. Oh! what must have been the sufferings of this incomparable woman, at that moment, when, calling to mind that she had already lost her daughter, she saw they were going to murder her son, her last hope, and the only child she supposed she had left!

Where is there, I will not say a tender mother, or compassionate stranger, who would not have shed tears at such a sentence?—Queens!—Princesses!—Ladies!—women of all ranks!—attend to her reply, and profit by her example.

"Dear Sire, I formerly vowed, and now solemnly repeat that vow, never to disobey you. When on entering this palace I quitted my humble dress, and resigned at the same time my will to your's forever; and could I possibly divine your wishes, you would always find them anticipated. Inform me only of your commands: if to prepare for death, I willingly consent; for I should prefer that to the misfortune of offending you!"

Gautier was more and more astonished. One who had known less of Griselidis might have supposed such firmness of mind proceeded only from inflexibility; but he, who had so often witnessed, when she nursed her children, the excess of her tenderness for them, knew that that resolution could only proceed from the great love she bore him.

He sent, as before, his faithful steward for the child, and had him carried to Bologna, and brought up with his little sister.

After two such severe trials, Gautier ought to have been perfectly convinced of the obedience and submission of his wife, and not thought of afflicting her again; but some suspicious minds are never satisfied, and, when once they have begun, make the greatest delight in tormenting others.

The Marchioness not only appeared to have forgotten her double misfortune, but to grow every day more gentle and affectionate. Gautier, nevertheless, intended to torment her again. When his daughter was twelve years old, and his son eight, he wished to have them return to him, and wrote to the Countess his sister to bring them herself. At the same time had it reported every where, that he was going to be divorced from this wife, and to take another.

This cruel report soon reached the ears of Griselidis: they told her that a young lady of high birth, and very handsome, was soon to be Marchioness of Saluces. You may suppose how much she would be shocked at the idea of such an event taking place. She, however, summoned all her resolution, and waited patiently for her husband's commands.

He sent for her one day, and, in the presence of some of his Barons, said to her—

"Griselidis, for twelve years that we have lived together, your company has always given me pleasure, for I have regarded your virtues more than your birth; but my subjects wish me to have an heir to my estates, and the Pope has permitted me to take a wife more suitable to my rank. She will arrive here in a few days: therefore prepare to resign your place to her. Carry back your dower, and summon all your resolution."

"My Lord," replied Griselidis, "I well knew the daughter of Janicola was unworthy to be your wife; and in this palace, of which you were pleased to make me mistress, I take God to witness, I never returned him my fervent thanksgiving for that honor without acknowledging that unworthiness. As it is your will, I shall leave this place without regret, where I have so long lived happily, and return to the cottage where I was born, and where I can still render to my father the cares and attentions I was forced to entrust to a stranger. As to the dower you mention, you know, my Lord, that, with a pure heart, I could only bring you poverty, respect, and love. All the clothes that I have worn belong to you: permit me to leave them and take again those I had on when I came, which I have carefully preserved. I here restore to you the ring with which you married me.—Poor I left my father's home, and poor I will return; except in the honor of being the irreproachable widow of such a husband!"

The Marquis was so much affected at this reply, that the tears came into his eyes, and he was obliged to leave the room to conceal them.

Griselidis, leaving her elegant clothes, jewels, and other ornaments, put on her former humble dress, and set out for her native village, accompanied by a number of Knights and ladies, whose tears flowed for the loss of such an amiable woman. She alone did not weep, but walked silently along, with her eyes fixed upon the ground.—They arrived in this manner at her father's, who did not appear at all astonished at her return, for he always had his doubts of this marriage ending happily, and thought that, sooner or later, the Marquis would be tired of his daughter, and send her back again.—The old man tenderly embraced her, and, without shewing the least grief or anger, returned thanks to the company who attended her, and exhorted them to be loyal, and love their sovereign. But what sorrow must Janicola inwardly have felt, when he considered that his daughter, after having enjoyed all the pleasures of life, must in future want for even common necessities! but she did not appear to feel it, and supported her father's courage.

At length the Count and Countess D'Empeche, with the two children and a large party of friends, arrived within a day's journey of the Castle. The Marquis, to complete his last trial, sent for Griselidis, and said to her—

"Daughter of Janicola, my intended bride arrives to-morrow; and as no person in my palace knows what I like so well as you do (and I wish particularly to receive her, my brother and sister, and their friends, in a noble manner), I would have you take charge of every thing; and above all the reception of my bride."

"Sir," she replied, "I have so many obligations to you, that, while it pleases God to spare my life, I shall always think it my duty to do any thing that gives you pleasure."

She then went to give orders to the officers and domestics, assisted them in every thing, and prepared the nuptial apartment destined for her whose near approach had driven herself from it.

When the young lady appeared, far from shewing, as might have been expected, some emotion at the sight of her, or being ashamed of the keys she wore, she went to receive her, saluted her respectfully, and conducted her to the apartment which she had prepared. By a secret instinct, for which she could not account, she was charmed with the children, and never ceased looking at them and praising their beauty.

At the dinner-hour, when all the company were assembled at table, the Marquis sent for Griselidis, and shewing her this pretended bride, to whose native charms was added the most magnificent dress, asked what she thought of her.

"My Lord," she replied, "you could not have chosen one more beautiful, or more pleasing; and if God favorably receives the prayers I shall daily make for you, you will live happy with her. But, oh! my Lord, I pray you spare this wife the bitter pangs which the other suffered; for, being younger, and more tenderly brought up, she would soon die of a broken heart."

At these words the tears came into the Marquis's eyes, and he could dissemble no longer, but cried out—

"Griselidis!—my beloved Griselidis!—it is too much! To prove your love, I have done what no other man under Heaven could have thought of, and have found you obedient, tender, and faithful!"

He then approached Griselidis, who had modestly bowed her head at these encomiums, and, clasping her in his arms, moistened her cheeks with his tears; and added, in the presence of all the company—

"You, most incomparable woman, are her alone in the world that I should think worthy to be my wife. My subjects, as well as yourself, have believed me to be the murderer of my children, but they have only been sent away from you; and my sister, to whose care I entrusted them, has brought them back here. My son and daughter, fall at the feet of your respectable mother."

Griselidis, unable to support such extreme joy, fainted away; and when, by proper assistance, she recovered her senses, she pressed her children to her heart, kissed and wept over them so long, that they could scarcely take them from her. All the company sympathized with her, and nothing was heard but sounds of joy and admiration: and this feast, which the Marquis's love had prepared, became a triumph for his wife.

Gautier sent for Janicola to the Castle, whom he had hitherto appeared to neglect, on account of his wife, and paid him great respect during the remainder of his days.

VERSES ON THE CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

BY THE LATE WILLIAM COWPER, ESQ.

THANKLESS for favors from on High,
Man thinks he fades too soon:
Tho' 'tis his privilege to die,
Would he improve the boon.

But he, not wise enough to scan
His best concerns aright,
Would gladly stretch Life's little span
To Ages-----if he might;

To Ages in a world of pain,
To Ages where he goes,
Call'd by Affliction's heavy chain,
And hopeless of repose!

Strange fondness of the Human Heart---
Enamor'd of its harm;
Strange World, that costs it so much smart---
And yet has power to charm!

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1800.

Notwithstanding the ardent wish of the friends of peace, the fell reign of Bellona would terminate with the century, the last European accords, instead of brightening the prospect, announce the happy period as not likely to arrive. We hear of nothing but warlike preparations---the destructive influence of war has deadened the feelings of the soul, and emulation, no longer exerted to benefit mankind, strives only to invent fresh horrors to imbibit the cup of human felicity.

Humanity watches with the eye of eager expectancy for a favorable termination of the Congress of PEACE, at Amiens. The continent, which for ten years has been a scene of slaughter, may yet, if the hearts of rulers are not hardened to the soft emotions of pity, experience the glimmerings of happiness.

The French government have again made pacific overtures to the British court: The correspondence, which is carried in 47 papers, is highly interesting. The suspension of arms by sea and land was urged by OTTO, the French Commissioner, and a free navigation to the vessels of nations. The English Secretary of State, GRAMONT, considering that partial advantages would result from, refused to accede. Overtures were also made for separate peace, but the engagements of the English Committee of the measure, it was of course rejected.

The British Parliament were called together on the 11th inst. for the purpose of devising means for alleviating the miseries of the people, occasioned by the want of the necessaries of life. Resolutions were passed, preventing the manufacture of spirits, starch, &c. from corn; and allowing duties on the importation of wheat, barley, rye, oats, and rice.

Mr. Debby, Capt. Topps, of Baltimore, WITH SEVEN SLAVES, from the coast of Guinea, is condemned to be hanged at Bartholomews, by the Government of the Island. Similar success attend all those who thus build their hopes on the misery of others.

Mr. Barclay arrived here on Monday from St. Sebastian, that all intercourse between France and Spain is suspended, in consequence of the plague which rages in all the latter kingdom---All American vessels are obliged to undergo quarantine; and what is very singular, they are forbidden the introduction of their calamity to vessels from any port.

The ship Mercury, having on board a very valuable cargo of the river La Plata, bound to Philadelphia, is taken by the BRITISH and carried into Halifax; 70,000 lbs. of specie were landed from her at Halifax.

From Captain Shaw, of the United States schooner, of 12 guns to a friend in Baltimore, dated December 18, after mentioning the return of the ship which he had suffered from a West-India climate, am happy to inform you of my good success in the Indies---I have in my last cruise taken 12 sail made 300 French prisoners, killed and wounded 42 pieces of artillery and 180 stand of muskets which is really more than I could have contemplated.

Extract of a letter from Captain Brown, of the United States ship Merrimack, to the Secretary of the Navy, dated Basseterre, St. Kitts, November, 6.

"I left this port the 20th ultimo, and returned, here last evening with one of the finest brigs belonging to Guadaloupe, mounting 14 guns, and 120 men.

Extract of a letter from the Supercargo of the ship Favorite, Charles Bernard, master, dated St. Pierre, Guadaloupe, 23d Nov. 1800.

"On the 24th day after I left New-York, was taken by the French Privateer schooner Patriot, of this place, in about lat. 20, N and long. 66, W.; in whose possession I have been until this day, associated with negroes, and persons of almost every description. Fortunately for me, I met here a friend of mine, formerly of New-York, otherwise I should been confined in the common prison, among all the convicts of the country. Please inform all concerned in the ship Favorite, of her destiny, as I am allowed to write only this much, by this opportunity."

LATEST NEWS.

By the arrival at Boston of the schooner Traveller, Capt. Dingley, from London, we have received intelligence to the 14th ult.

PARIS, Oct. 24.

Citizen Pichon is appointed French Commissary General to reside at Philadelphia. He will act as Charge d'affaires until a Minister is sent out.

The Invasion of Tuscany was in consequence of the rising of the people, and their subsequent operations against the French; and to prevent the English from landing troops to assist them. The day after the French obtained possession of Leghorn, an English fleet with twelve thousand troops appeared off that place. The proceedings of the French in this business is no violation of the armistice.

CADIZ, Oct. 16.

Ld. Keith, with his fleet, has withdrawn from before this city. It is said, the contagion which has prevailed here, has made its appearance, in an alarming manner, on board the English ships.

LUNEVILLE, Nov. 7.

The Count de Cobentzel arrived here this morning at 5 o'clock, and Joseph Buonaparte at noon. The former was saluted with 18 pieces of cannon, and the latter by ringing the only bell left us. The two Ministers lodge in private houses, until their apartments in the castle shall be completely furnished.

LONDON, Nov. 11.

The King has issued his Proclamation for convening the united Parliament, pursuant to the union with Ireland, on the 22d day of January.

NOV. 12.

Count Cobentzel, who is at Paris from Vienna has dispatched a Courier, with some important letters to our government; which have been answered, and the Courier has returned.

A serious difference exists between the Emperor of Germany and the Elector of Bavaria. The Minister of the latter has been withdrawn from Vienna.---The English continue raising recruits on the continent.

NOV. 14.

The French funds have lately experienced a fall; and orders have been given for the movement of the troops. These are disagreeable omens to the friends of peace.

L. Buonaparte is gone to Russia, and his commission is conjectured to be connected with the subject of Peace, or to neutralize that power if war is renewed.

Letters from Mannheim, Oct. 31, state that the Austrian Army have received orders to be in readiness to march; and the resumption of hostilities is expected.

Caracchi, and nineteen accomplices, have been delivered to the criminal tribunal, for conspiring against the life of Buonaparte.

An order has been issued, that every Italian shall quit France in 24 hours, and be furnished with passports for Milan. The Corsican Arden who drew a dagger on Buonaparte at St. Cloud, is one of the leaders of the conspiracy.

RUSSIANS. There is doubt but large armies are in preparation. Some accounts say, that they are to assist the Emperor if war is renewed: other accounts declare they will operate against him if he does not become more humble in his designs!

COURT of HYMEN.

WHEN all the charms true taste approve,
Unite within the maid we love,
Awaking all our soft desires,
And lighting up Hymeneal fires;
The altar we with rapture greet,
The chain is light, the bondage sweet.

MARRIED

On Saturday evening, the 6th inst. by the Rev Dr Rogers, Mr HUGH M'CORMICK, to Miss HESTER KUMBLE, both of this city.

On Tuesday evening, the 9th inst. at Morris-Town, (New-Jersey,) by the Rev Asa Hillyer, Mr ABRAHAM RICHARDS, of this city, to Miss SARAH ANNOLD, of Morris-Town.

On Thursday evening, the 18th inst. by the Rev Mr Seixas, Mr MICHAEL ISAACS, to Mrs. FANNY LAZARUS, both of this city.

Same evening, at Norwalk, (Connecticut,) by the Rev Mr Bunnet, Mr DAVID LOCKWOOD, to Miss SALLY LOCKWOOD, both of that place.

At Perth, Scotland, Mr ROBERT MELVILLE, aged sixty-seven, to Miss ROSS, aged nineteen. The disparity of years between this happy pair was not the most remarkable thing attending the marriage;---the bridegroom's mother, above one hundred years of age, danced several reels at the wedding, with as much agility as a girl of twenty.

A SONG.

TUNE—"The Humors of Glen."

SOME sing of sweet Mally, some sing of fair Nelly,
And some call sweet Sue the cause of their pain,
Some love to be jolly, some love melancholy,
And some love to sing of the Humors of Glen.
But my only fancy is my pretty Nancy,
In venting my passion I'll strive to be plain;
I'll ask no more treasure, I'll seek no more pleasure
But thee, my dear Nancy, gin thou wert my ain.
Her beauty delights me, her kindness invites me,
Her pleasant behavior is free from all stain,
Therefore, my sweet jewel, O do not prove cruel
Consent, my dear Nancy, and come be my ain.
Her carriage is comely, her language is homely,
Her dress is quite decent, when ta'en in the main
She's blooming in feature, she's handsome in stature
My charming, dear Nancy, O wert thou my ain.
Like Phœbus adorning the fair juddy morning
Her bright eyes are sparkling, her brows are serene,
Her yellow locks shining, in beauty combining,
My charming sweet Nancy, wilt thou be my ain?
The whole of her face is with maidenly graces
Array'd like the gowands, that grow in yon glen,
She's well-shap'd and slender, true-hearted and tender
My charming sweet Nancy, O wert thou my ain.
I'll seek thro' the nation for some habitation,
To shelter my jewel from cold, snow, and rain,
With songs to my deary, I'll keep her ay cheery,
My charming sweet Nancy, gin thou wert my ain,
I'll work at my calling, and furnish thy dwelling
With every thing needful my life to sustain,
Thou shalt not sit single, but by a clear ingle,
I'll marrow thee, Nancy, when thou art my ain.
I'll make true affection the constant direction,
Of loving my Nancy while life doth remain;
Tho' youth will be wasting, true love shall be lasting,
My charming sweet Nancy, gin thou wert my ain.
But what if my Nancy should alter her fancy,
To favor another be forward and fain,
I will not compel her, but plainly I'll tell her Begone, thou false Nancy, thou'lt ne'er be my ain.

ON KISSING.

And if it were not lawful, the Lawyers would not use it;
And if it were not pious, the Clergy would not chuse it;
And if it were not a dainty thing, the Ladies would not
crave it;
And if it were not a plentiful thing, the poor girls could not have it.

ON TOBACCO.

A PARODY BY A SAILOR.

And if it wasn't lawful, the Lawyers would not use it,
And if it wasn't pleasant, the Parsons would not chuse it
And if it wasn't a dainty thing, the gentry would not
crave it,
And if it wasn't a plentiful thing, why, we poor dogs could not have it.

ANECDOTE.

A CERTAIN farmer, who was fond of boasting of the fertility of the soil on which he lived--the salubrity of the air, and the wonderful crops that were produced under his care; at a certain ale house some time ago was telling among other wonderful tales, that he had raised the preceding year the largest turnips he ever saw; that some measured three feet in circumference, and were from four to five feet in length; but said they were produced in a piece of land he had cleared for that purpose. The admiring crowd were still more astonished, when they heard a traveller, who had stopped to comfort himself with a sup of whiskey, observe, that the story of the turnips, reminded him of a little town, in the west of England, through which he had travelled; which was entirely inhabited by coppersmiths; and what he thought most wonderful was, to see two and thirty at work on one kettle? The farmer observed, that he thought it impossible, as they would be in each other's way. Lord no, said the traveller; so far from it, that they could not hear each other hammering.
Amazing! cried the farmer; what in the world did they intend the kettle for? I don't know, indeed, said the traveller, unless it was to boil your turnips in.

MORALIST.

DETACHED THOUGHTS.

THE most acceptable thing in the world is a discreet liberality. He that gives to all without discretion will soon stand in need of every one's assistance.

Liberality does not so much consist in giving largely as in giving seasonably.

We should be generous, but not profuse or profligate.

There is no passion that more excites us to every thing that is noble and generous, than virtuous love.

Solid love, whose root is virtue, can no more die than virtue itself.

God is love, and the more we endeavor to imitate the Deity, the nearer we approach to perfection and happiness.
Love or charity is moreover the distinguishing characteristic of a true Christian.

That sweet and elegant uniting of the minds, which is properly called love, has no other knot but virtue, and therefore if it be right love, it can never slide into any action that is not virtuous.
